EQC CELEBRATES 30 YEARS OF PROTECTING KENTUCKY'S ENVIRONMENT

Are you concerned about the quality of Kentucky's environment? You can now express your concerns to state officials in an online survey. You can also view live results from the survey. To date, 71% of respondents indicate they are very concerned about the environment and 51% indicate that state environmental laws are not strict enough. Maybe you would rather view a timeline of environmental events in Kentucky dating back to the 1750s. Or read what Wendell Berry, Dr. Thomas Clark and others say about the environmental challenges facing Kentucky in a collection of essays.

The survey, timeline and essays are all part of a new Web site created to celebrate the 30th anniversary of the Environmental Quality Commission. Thirty years ago, legislation creating the EQC was passed. The legislation had 60 sponsors and served as a strong statement that the protection of Kentucky's environment was important and critical to our future. EQC, for the first time, gave citizens a role in state environmental decision making and created a process to ensure public input.

Gov. Paul Patton in a proclamation noted that "EQC serves a vital role as a forum to allow citizens of this great Commonwealth an opportunity to voice their concerns and discuss environmental matters of public concern in a constructive manner."

Please take the time to check out the new EQC Anniversary Web site at www.kyeqc.net today and fill out the survey.

ENERGY IN THE NEWS

State Energy Strategy Under Development

Patton said. Federal and state agencies, along with industry and academic experts, will be involved in the development of the strategy.
